passwords have been compromised. When hackers obtain your e-mail address and password, it is much more likely they will also acquire more important secure information, such as bank accounts or social security numbers. If you use the same password with all of your logins or even have different variations of that password, you may want to rethink your password strategy.

The article "How to Recover After Your Password is Compromised", describes the many ways you can better protect yourself and your passwords. Read the full article here.

MONTHLY TIP

3 Tips to Protect Yourself from a Virus Infection

1. Firewall: If you use Windows, as many of us do, make sure your Windows firewall service is turned on. You also have a network firewall in place to protect your entire company network.

2. Antivirus/Antispyware: Make sure you have both an antivirus and antispyware software package installed and configured properly on every computer in your office. It is not enough to just have it installed, it needs to be configured properly.

3. Software Updates: Make sure to consistently update your antivirus/antispyware software as well as making sure your Windows updates are downloaded and installed.

FEATURED SERVICE

Network Security Assessment

BalanceLogic's network security assessment is performed by experienced professionals with proven methods and tools.

Our assesement identifies several network and application vulnerabilities and weaknesses, including zero day attacks, configuration issues, and missing security patches. We can also direct our assessment to be focus on regulatory compliance such as HIPPA or PCI.

We will analyze your network for security exposures and compliance issues and propose appropriate solutions.
